Rasputin surrounded by his admirers at tea, 1914. This photograph, accompanied by doggerel verses by V. M. Purishkevich and distributed widely to discredit Rasputin, suggesting he was an intimate of smart society women, caused bewilderment in St. Petersburg: with one exception (Mounya Golovina, seated fourth from left), the women were, in fact, all unknowns.

and early on Doreen or 24th last news was brought into camp that a panther had been stalked the evening before close to Elhora. Arrangements for the sport were made by Colonel Gerard and the staff, and at 6.30 A.M. the party started. The beat commenced about an hour later, and at 11 A.M. the panther was seen moving in the jungle. However, he again took to cover, and it was not until after half-an-hour's waiting that he looked straight for the spot where the Czarevich was stationed. Prince Bariainski fired a long shot, which had the effect of turning the panther in his direction. The Prince fired again, disabling the animal, which was then killed by Prince Obolenski. The beat was extremely well managed, though unfortunately neither the Czarevich nor Prince George of Greece got a shot. The panther was a well-grown animal, about three years old. We are indebted to Lala Ireen Dayal, of Indore and Secunderabad, for the photograph from which the engraving of the shooting party is taken.
